Full Student Evaluations

This document contains the NYU evaluations for each course I taught or assisted with between 2016 and 2021. It also includes comments from an Oxford student I have taught in multiple classes (Oxford does not routinely provide student feedback).

Because of an NYU administrative error, I did not receive student evaluations for my role as Teaching Assistant for Philosophy of Mind (Fall 2018). The main instructor for that course was Antonia Peacocke, who has written my teaching recommendation letter.

The NYU evaluations use a 1–5 scale, where 5 is the best possible score.

Ethics and Extended Essay in Ethics (Hilary Term 2025)

Comments sent to me by an Oxford student:

"David was my tutor for my undergraduate Ethics module, where he led eight in person tutorials. His sessions were always well-structured and engaging, and he always responded thoughtfully to the points we raised in our essays, offering lots of feedback to help strengthen our arguments. He had a great way of breaking down complex ideas, making them much easier to understand, and he often recommended helpful resources and articles to deepen our understanding. David was also my supervisor for my independent coursework project (also on Ethics), and I couldn't have asked for better support! He was encouraging and approachable, providing in-person feedback on my first draft and helping me shape the structure of my project. His guidance made a real difference, and I really appreciate all his help and expertise."

Instructor Comments

Describe the one best thing about the course or the instructor that was effective in helping you learn. If you could suggest one thing to improve the course, what would it be?

- David is very understanding and patient and willing to walk through students through what they don't understand.

  I felt the lectures were informative and the problem sets were especially helpful in reinforcing what we learned in class.

  I felt like working on exercises in groups in break-out rooms would have been helpful if other students participated. But since there was no supervision as there is in some other classes, so people often turned off their cameras and we didn't work together as a group.
- I think there could have been less breakout group assignments. There were times where no one in the breakout group was confident in the problem we were working to solve, so then we ended up just sitting there and struggling. It would have been helpful to have done just more problems together as a class. Also, it was sometimes hard to read what was on the white board. However, I did really like the problem sets and the amount of time we had on each one.
- good instructor and course, maybe the only thing I'd say is he should find a way to rotate through students to try to get different volunteers for questions.
- I just found this class to be really difficult. The instructor was good, but the material was too challenging for me.

Describe the one best thing about the course or the instructor that was effective in helping you learn. If you could suggest one thing to improve the course, what would it be?

- The instructor was very accessible and open to helping students outside of class hours as well as being very accommodating and fair. The overall structure of the class could be improved by relying less on the computer programs and doing more hands-on learning during class time and engaging with the whole class. For example, instead of consistently using only examples from the textbooks, expand the range of examples to more real-world applications so students can have a more full understanding of the reasoning behind the formal logic.
- good examples during class helped me understand the material
- The Professor was very patient with students who did not understand the material. The course was rather slowly paced though, with a large portion of each class dedicated to reviewing prior material.
- The visual diagrams were the most helpful
- I really liked the breakout rooms because it gave us a chance to find a solution and ask questions. One thing I would suggest is practicing more problems from the textbook in class.
- I feel like I took every opportunity to say it, but this course moved really, really slowly. We could have covered the first half of the semester's material in three weeks, and moved on to more mathematically interesting logic. It also felt like the homework was largely busywork, which more tested our ability to deal with syntax and parenthesis than actual deductive skills. I see how this course could potentially be useful for symbolophobic philosophy majors- but even if that is the intent- we should have put greater focus on how these formal logic arguments relate to the art of Rhetoric. I think I might take Discrete Maths next semester so I get a better foundation- perhaps philosophy majors should be allowed to substitute out an equivalent course from the math department?

Instructor Comments

Describe the one best thing about the course or the instructor that was effective in helping you learn. If you could suggest one thing to improve the course, what would it be?

- Professor Storrs-Fox is one of the best philosophy professors I have had in my 3.5 years at NYU. I received in depth, constructive, and encouraging feedback while still be challenged at critiqued appropriately. Further, class discussions were well-directed and lively. The material was difficult but well-explained if we needed help understanding.
- excellent

Describe the best thing about the course/instructor that was effective in helping you learn.

- Providing helpful feedback on homework.

- Chelsea was great at helping students form and defend their own views on divisive topics in the course. In this way she managed to make the course accessible to students who were just starting out in philosophy, while maintaining the rigor for those of us who are veterans. Great course all around.

- The best thing about the instructor is his tolerance for his students. He's willing to go far out of his way to make sure that his students understand the material, while still holding them responsible for the quality of their work. One thing that I would suggest to improve the class would be to develop weekly problem sets that are more doable in the given amount of time.

Describe the best thing about the section/instructor that was effective in helping you learn.

- David allowed a lot of people to break into small groups and have discussions every recitation, which helped a lot because the recitation would frequently devolve into 2 or 3 people talking, leaving the rest of the class out. David also addressed tangents that we went on in class, instead of forcing us to stay with one topic. If David could make it mandatory that students meet with him to go over grades from assignments, that would be appreciated. I only met with David regarding feedback I received on a paper late in the semester, and found my discussion with him to be very helpful. So helpful, that I think it should be mandatory to meet with the TA.

- I wish David lead the discussion more often because usually in recitations students ramble on.

- At least in recitation, we were able to actually have a discussion. It was kind of fun, if nothing else.

  But in terms of actually succeeding in the class, the recitation didn't matter at all. The feedback on papers was helpful, but not helpful enough to actually result in better grades the second time around. I think the TAs are really just slaves to Pryor's will, and if Pryor wants the average to be a B-, it'll be a B- regardless of what the TAs think of our papers.

  Nothing about the recitation helped me get a better grade in this class. It was just a space to debate about philosophy for fun.

- The best thing about the recitation section was being able to discuss and further apply concepts from the lecture

- Recitation was the best part of the class because we got to carve out our own discussions about the topics at hand and have really interesting debates. It was a highlight of my week. If anything, I would try to make them even more discussion based.

- It was fun
- David is really open minded and stimulating for discussion
- Really good
- David did a great job in facilitating conversations and typing up loose ends from lectures
- Allowed us to talk,

  Make it harder
- NA
- Always available for questions, fostered student discussion no matter the view.
- I would suggest that he learn how to better conduct conversation, and to not be so judgmental of students when they don't understand the material.
- Had a nice time while I was there, for the most part.
- One best thing about the course was getting to discuss the topics we were learning about in our recitation sections. I felt these classes, as opposed to the lectures, got students much more involved in the learning process. If I could suggest one thing to improve, it would be that we focussed more on honing our skills as philosophical writers and not just thinkers. I feel there was a lack of understanding about exactly how to write the assigned papers, and I think my grades suffered as a result.
- My favorite thing about recitation was the small-group discussion, which helped me to clarify my ideas and positions. An improvement I would suggest would be to start on time (or at least officially redefine the starting time); even if all but one or two students show up a few minutes late, that probably happens since they know the recitation won't have started yet.
- Thank god for my TA because the professor made no sense.
- The instructor created an environment where we really felt comfortable to express our opinions and thoughts. He was always very encouraging and successful in helping us better understand any questions we had about the material as well as expanding/ grounding our knowledge. It might be helpful to directly refer to the assigned readings/films so it can be easier for us to connect the theory to the readings (both in lecture and in recitations).

- Recitation can be more about the summary of the weekly lecture

- Davidbwas able to to decipher the lectures well, but we would often go on tangents that would make us confront the concept of vagueness, or a feeling that most of the problems we were looking at were semantic problems instead.

- David was amazing!

Instructor Comments

Describe the best thing about the section/instructor that was effective in helping you learn.

- It would be helpful if the recitations were less interactive and more lecture styled
- I don't know. Maybe a review session would help?
- The recitation was very helpful in catching up with what was not covered in class. I wish that we could get more feedback on assignments, as we only have 2 essays and a midterm and a final, having not received a midterm grade so close before the final is not practical as we have no real idea of how we are doing in the course.
- Everything is great
- Perhaps the TA can select passages to close read and interpret the argument.
- The recitation was the only reason I passed this class.
- David, you are a great and caring TA and you really helped in clarifying some of the difficult topics we covered in class!
- David was very good at re-explaining concepts and he encouraged questions from outside the box. Longer recitations , since the topic is so complex ,would have been great.

- Keep up the good work

- David was really great at conveying complex concepts and answering questions, and was always open to giving students extra help outside the classroom and via email.
  Perhaps a set time for weekly office hours would be helpful to students with quick questions/concerns.

- Great discussions and really helped make sense of the material. I wish we could have received our exams and essays back in a timely manner so I could understand expectations before completing the next assignment

- I find the section not really that effective in helping me learn. I hope it could be more organized

- David could be better about correcting people. He lets people ramble on a bit too much but that's understandable considering how much of his performance review comes from student evals. Thanks for the great class, David!

Describe the best thing about the section/instructor that was effective in helping you learn.

- good question
- Group discussions were fun and allowed for interesting ideas to be brought up
- David was good at facilitating discussions but his feedback on our assignments was frustrating. He only pointed out flaws in arguments or wrote "Good". There needs to be more concrete feedback on what exactly was wrong/needs improvement overall, i.e. "some of your arguments need to be supported more or are not clearly explained. You can do x to make that happen". It also would have been helpful to know how their grading scale works, and where/for what exactly points are taken off as it all seemed a bit arbitrary when looking at the assignments. Also, being able to show the TA a rough draft of my paper would have been very helpful at improving it as they refused to look at rough drafts so it was hard to get concrete feedback on the work we were doing and it sort of felt like we were writing the assignment blind to what was expected of us, which was intensely frustrating.
- I enjoyed recitation because we talked about interesting thing. However, I felt David was not understanding what the students were talking about. he also was an unfair grader. I put in a lot of time to my essays and it felt like he was not thinking through the scores he gave out. My friend and I got the same amount of feedback and I got an 85 and she got a 97. It felt so random and I am upset about it.
- David was very helpful!
- Being open to meeting with me not in his office hours. Having a better understanding of the prompts before meeting with students
- Discuss more about writing skills, it feels as if the scores are too qualitative, what diffentiates an 84 from an 85?
- The GOAT.

Really appreciated the depth of interest in our papers and the intellectual dialogue there. Starting the year with tips for good paper writing would be helpful, or maybe sales early on?

- Super open, and a really fun recitation!! Loved it
- David created a really warm and open environment in the recitations. I really enjoyed his class!
- We didn't get enough help on the essays and they were very challenging. i felt i couldn't improve bc of lack of feedback
- He was good at facilitating discussions. The one thing I would suggest to improve would be to be more transparent in grading and what he was looking for in the assignments.
- The discussions are a lot of fun and David does a great job leading them.
- N/A
- Giving us feedback on our papers earlier, so we know how to write the next paper.
- He was helpful in breaking down complex philosophical theories and making sure we understand. My main issue is that when grading our assignments, he was biased and graded along with what he thought was right from the philosophical theory; another issue is that in class he would explain the prompt one way, email about it another, and grade in a completely different fashion.
- He let us talk about whatever we wanted.
  Needs to be more open to listening students ideas and being more forward with what he wants in an essay
- More clear expectations for papers
- connect philosophy more to readings
- Always created interesting discussions that made everyone wanting to participate, and express themselves. Easier and clearer grading criteria, if possible.
- Great discussions in recitation. It could be better by staying on topic instead of going on tangents so much.

- Open dialogue
- very interactive
